The Theatre Of Work

Presented by Clive Wilkinson, President and Design Director, Clive Wilkinson Architects

The workplace projects of Clive Wilkinson have helped define today's changing workplace and its social relevance. In his keynote presentation, Wilkinson will discuss the critical forces that have shaped the modern workplace, drawing on examples from his extensive portfolio, including Googleplex in Silicon Valley, Macquarie Group's One Shelley Street in Sydney, and workplaces for Disney, JWT New York and TBWA/Chiat/Day in Los Angeles. Beyond stylistic concerns about workplace design, his work aims to promote the building of creative communities, and in doing so, elevate the workplace to its rightful place as a "theatre of human experience."

What To Expect From The Future Of Work

Presented by Jan Owen, CEO, Foundation for Young Australians

What will work in Australia look like in the future? In what industries will we be working in and in what way? What will future members of the workforce be expecting from their employers and colleagues? And how do we prevent future shock? With a background in social change organizations and through her work with young Australians, Owen will explore these questions and many more in her keynote presentation.

Heigh Ho, Heigh Ho, It's Off To Work We Go

Presented by Colin Seah, Founder and Director of Design, Ministry of Design

The rhythms, processes and communities that have defined our experience of the contemporary workplace continue to evolve at a rapid rate. How has it evolved and more critically, where is it headed? Through the lens of Ministry of Design's projects, including the BBH and Leo Burnett Offices, Seah will share his thoughts of the continuum of workplace design, differentiating what he sees as essential versus trendy design. He will also discuss this from the perspective of the workplace in Singapore, a global hub that seeks to balance its past with its future.
