As the world grapples with the most far-reaching health crisis in more than 100 years, along with an ageing population and persistent health disparities, the role that architecture can play in health care deserves renewed attention.

How can we ensure architectural agency in the health care sector is progressive and responsive, rather than reactive? This edition of the Health Care / Health Design forum will explore how architectural outcomes can influence the quality and efficiency of our health care systems. Over four days from 15 June, leading practitioners, researchers and administrators from Australia and abroad will discuss issues, share their experiences and interrogate architecture's relationship with the health challenges the world faces today.

FRAME OF MIND: DESIGNING FOR MENTAL HEALTH

In healthcare design, the environments architects create are for patients when they are at their most vulnerable. While poorly designed environments exacerbate patient anxiety and stress, well-conceived architecture can lead to improved health outcomes. With this in mind, will the movement of a human-centred design approach re-shape what we currently understand to be healthcare design? In this session, speakers at the forefront of research and practice in this sector will discuss the kind of architectural interventions that are needed.
