Program Info

The workplace is evolving, prompting a shift in what a typical office can and should offer. As employers and employees get familiar with working on and off site, a change in office atmosphere and amenities is not only a movement but a demand. In this edition of Work Place / Work Life, we question what these new expectations are and how design can cater to them. We'll hear from leading practitioners, researchers and workplace experts from Australia and abroad as they discuss and critique the future of office design.

THE REALITY OF REALTY: WHERE'S TOMORROW'S OFFICE?

After experiencing a significant shift in where we work, the return to the city is underway. With this in mind, what role do designers play in enticing businesses and individuals back to work in the city and where are organisations looking to lease? Speakers in this session will present case studies, research and insights that indicate the trajectory of locations for office tenancies and how this is reshaping workplace design.

Speakers.

Philip Vivian

Philip Vivian is a director at Bates Smart, where he has led the Sydney studio since 1998. He is an architect and urban designer, and has studied city design at the London School of Economics and Columbia University in New York.

A specialist in large-scale commercial projects, Philip has helped shape Sydney's architecture, transport and public domain, setting the course for the city's development as it faces unprecedented growth. Key projects he has worked on include Sydney 2050–2070, the City of Sydney's vision plan for future urban transformation, and integrated station developments at Victoria Cross Metro Station in North Sydney and Pitt Street South in the Sydney CBD.

Ada Choi

Ada Choi is the executive director of research at CBRE in the Asia Pacific, advising corporate clients of occupier real estate strategies. She also leads data intelligence and research management in the region. During 2018–2020, Ada acted as head of research for Greater China, leading about 40 researchers.

Ada has over 10 years' experience in the Asia Pacific property market and publishes thematic research on the region's real estate market. Her research interests span from aspirations of millennials in reshaping the real estate sector to the rise of institutional investors globally.

Moderator.

Rebecca Trenorden

Rebecca Trenorden is an associate director at Carr, leading the commercial interiors team.

She draws on international experience and a multi-disciplinary approach to create places that achieve a sense of clarity and cohesion. For Rebecca, good design is about something greater than the sum of its parts; it's the feeling it evokes and the response it receives. Good design encourages tenant retention and attraction.
