As a driver for opportunity and independence, education has the potential to advance society as a whole and is an important investment for our future. So, how can architecture create learning environments with equity, community and longevity at their core? In this edition of Old School / New School, we hear from leading practitioners, researchers and educators from Australia and abroad as they discuss and interrogate architecture's role in the future of education.

THINKING AHEAD: DESIGNING THE EVOLVING CAMPUS

Architects can iteratively contribute to the built environment of a school or university and, increasingly, we are seeing design experts consult on planning frameworks that guide prospective developments on campus. These projects involve future-focused design approaches that seek to connect new buildings with the existing context and the values of the particular institution. In this session, we explore this relationship between design thinking and the evolution of the campus. Speakers will share policies and research that speculate on architectural agency and the future of educational precincts.
